For over 30 years, the Association has been providing self-management groups for people living with chronic pain.

Over that time, people participating in the groups have confirmed that living with persistent pain impacts on their lives. It affects both their health and well being as well as relationships with family, friends and work colleagues.

People report experiencing isolation, stress, depression, poor mobility, lowered self-esteem, fatigue and an increased use of medication.

The groups provide support and an opportunity to develop the skills in self-management that can help you address some of these problems.

“Nice to meet others, hear how they deal with pain, helped me change things & have a better quality of life.”

Why Self-Management?
Self-management is an important approach to health that explores the things that you can do to improve the quality of your life despite living with a painful condition. It is not a replacement for medicine and it does not necessarily provide direct pain relief. What it does do for many people, however, is to help them cope better with their pain.

How do Groups Help?
The groups are professionally led and focus on helping you to improve the quality of your life. The groups do not provide a cure for your pain, but they can offer a positive way forward for people who are ready and willing to engage with the monthly topics.

The ‘open door’ style means that you only attend the groups when it is convenient or where the topic of the month appears relevant to you. You are free to attend as many or as few groups across the year as you wish. Most people find participating in the groups on a regular basis a great source of support, regardless of the topic being explored.

Who are the Groups Designed for?
The groups are designed for anyone who has chronic pain, whether or not they have a diagnosis. They are particularly helpful for those who are ready to consider non-medical approaches to improving their quality of life. Carers and partners are also welcome.

It is understood that people living with pain find it difficult to sit for long periods. Participants are encouraged to get up and move about when they need to. Also there is a coffee break half way through each session. A cushion may help you to feel more comfortable.

This short video was made for professionals referring patients to Pain Association Scotland in Dumfries & Galloway. It gives a good introduction to the Association from the perspective of Susan, who lives with chronic pain and has benefited from attending the courses and groups. Phil, the Lead Trainer, explains what to expect from the groups.

A fast-moving film from Australia but it gets across a lot of important points, including the difference between acute and chronic pain; the impact chronic pain can have on your life and some ways to understand and manage your experience of pain.

Frequently Asked Questions

Can I speak to the medical team again?
Attending a group should complement any medical help you are receiving. However, participating in a group has resulted in many people doing a lot more for themselves and being less reliant on medical services. They also feedback that having a better understanding of pain makes it easier for them when speaking with healthcare professionals.

What benefit will I get from attending a group?
Self-management is not a cure. However, it can make a big difference. Benefits vary from person to person. They also vary according to the extent to which people engage with the group. Over the years, the benefits reported include:

- Being able to cope better.
- A growing sense of being in control rather than having pain influencing what they can and can’t do.
- Better able to adjust the pace of their work and activities to avoid over doing things (having flare-ups).
- Reducing stress levels and better able to relax.
- Getting back to work / staying at work.
- Improved relationships with friends and family.
- Improved self-esteem and confidence.
- Fewer flare-ups that pass quicker.

What people say about the courses

- “...helped me release a lot of tension by talking about it with others”
- “...has been a huge help as you know you’re not alone when it comes to pain issues”
- “My condition has improved, pill intake has reduced...negative perception of my condition has improved”
- “Nice to meet other people and hear how they deal with pain”
- “…it has helped me to change things & have a better quality of life”
- “...has changed my outlook on my illness”
- “...learned new ways of coping with my pain”
- “…has given me understanding and skills...have a back to work plan”
What Do I Do Now?

Meet the Team

The groups are led by a Training Officer who has training and experience in teaching self-management for chronic pain. They ensure that there is a safe, supportive and friendly environment. Although everyone is encouraged to participate, there is no pressure to say or do anything if you prefer not to. You will not be asked about your medical condition.

Group Topics

A programme of monthly topics is available. Each topic relates to the knowledge and skills that are known to be helpful in developing your ability to cope with pain and its effects on your life; for example:

- Understanding pain.
- Pacing skills (planning your activities in relation to your available energy).
- Anxiety, stress management and relaxation.
- The effect of negative thinking on your pain and how to be more positive.
- Improving sleep.
- Dealing with flare-ups (episodes of intense pain / symptoms).
- Managing changes in your life and to your health.
- Communicating effectively with the people around you.
